ث

A. ث sā, (A. thā). vulg. sè. The fifth letter of the Ottoman Turkish, as of the Persian, but the fourth of the Arabic alphabet. It is distinguished from other letters of similar form by the name, the three-dotted sa (ثاء مثلثه). From its place in the ابجد series, it is also named sa'i sakhaz (ثاء مخذ). It is sounded like s, and occurs in words of Arabic origin only. When this letter is the first radical of a triliteral root, Arabic grammar permits the eighth derivative form (افتعال), to be modified in three different ways, namely: it may be formed regularly; as ثلث, اثتلاث; ثلل, اثتلال; or, the radical ث and the servile ت may coalesce into ث under a teshdid, or sometimes into a ت under a teshdid; thus, اثاكل issi'āl, from ثكل; اثخان issikhān, from ثخن; اثغار issigār, and اتغار ittigār, from ثغر, etc.

The letter ث, in the ابجد series, holds the twenty third place, and its value in a chronogram is 500.

This letter, to distinguish it from the three-dotted Persian چ, is also designated جيم عربيه It always has the sound of the English "J." A. جه jè, abbreviation for درجه, A degree of an arc.

T. جه jè, jä, suffix. Added to soft-lettered and hard-lettered nouns and pronouns, respectively. When added to nouns or pronouns, it forms substantives, adjectives, or adverbs of manner; as, ادمجه After the manner of a man; بنجه According to me, respecting me. Sometimes this takes the sense of degree; as طاغلرجه In the degree of mountains, like mountains. With a name of a nation, it has sometimes the foregoing sense; but more generally, it forms the name of the language of the nation; as, تركجه The Turkish language. Added to an adjective, it forms the diminutive of the same; as, كوزلجه Fairish, pretty good.

This suffix is also added to certain parts of verbs to form gerunds. Thus it may be used to denote the time when; as كل come; كلنجه When (I, he, etc.) come; or it may denote the time until when, generally, in this case taking after it the dative suffix يه, and one of the adverbs دك, جك, or their hard forms دق, جق, or دكين قدر after this suffix; as بن كلنجه, بن كلنجه يه دك, بن كلنجه يه قدر or, بن كلنجه جك, بن كلنجه يه دكين Until I come. To denote succession, the suffix may be added to the past active verbal noun; as. كلدكجه As fast as . . . . comes

This suffix is often erroneously written چه the sound of which it euphonically takes after a sharp consonant as ت or ك, etc.

ح

A. ح hâ The sixth letter of the Arabic, but eighth of the Turkish and Persian alphabets; never used in words of true Persian origin, and seldom, if ever, correctly, in words of Turkish origin. It is found, however, occasionally so used interchangeably with خ in hard-vowelled Turkish and foreign terms, or with ه in soft-voweled words. Its power is that of a strong and hard, but pure aspirate, as in حاج hâjj, احمد ahmed, جناح jenâh, etc. Care should be taken to sound the aspirate fully, whether it occurs as initial, medial or final, avoiding at the same time the error of pronouncing this letter like خ (the Greek χ).

This letter represents the number 8; in astronomical tables, and in the members of a series, it is left entire, for distinction from the truncated ح (ـ). In dates of letters and documents ح (really an undotted ح), represents the month جمادى الاخر. (See ج)

The name of this letter, when written in full, is حاى مهملة năyi mŭhmėlė, the undotted ح.

The ح is the first of the hard class of consonants, and requires the vowels that follow it in a syllable to be hard nă, nă or nȧ, ni or nĭ, nu or nŭ; also, that the vowel of an initial ا preceding it in a syllable shall be pronounced a or u, though the initial kesre vowel is left soft, as in احسان ihsăn, احرام ihrăm, etc.

د

A. د dâl, vulg. dâl. The tenth letter of the Turkish and Persian alphabets, and the eighth of the Arabian letters; its phonetic value is that of the letter d. Its numerical value is four. To distinguish it from the letter ذ the letter د is called دال مهمله the neglected or undotted د, or دال ابجد the د of the word ابجد

This letter, like a few others, cannot be joined, in writing, to the letter which follows it, though it may be joined to a preceding letter.

In a few Arabic derived words of the eighth form (افتعال), when the initial root letter is د, ذ, or ز, the formative ت is changed into د, and this is made to coalesce with the initial radical in a letter د reduplicated in pronunciation; (in the case of initial ذ or ز, the reduplicated letter is sometimes ذ or ز, and sometimes the letters are written apart as pronounced) as ادعا (iddi'â) for ادتعا (idti'â), اذدکار (izdikyâr) for اذتکار (iztikyâr), and ازدواج (izdivâj) for ازتواج (iztivâj).

In Turkish words, the letter د is found occasionally where otherwise a ت or a ط is used, as, تابولغه or دابولغه, خارلتی or خارلدی, خویرات or خویراد, etc. An originally quiescent final ت also may change into د which becomes movent; as, قورت a wolf, قوردك of a wolf, etc. Also in verbs; as, ایت do thou, ایدیکز do ye, ایدر he does, he will do. In the word درت four, we have دردك of four, etc., but this rule of final quiescent ت changing into د is not generally applied to monosyllables; e. g., آت a horse, آتك of a horse, etc. Where the medial remains quiescent it does not change into د; as: قورتده in a wolf, قورتدن from a wolf; ایتدی he did, etc.

Grammatically, the letter د fills three or four important functions in Turkish verbs. As an element of the causative syllable در (dïr, dïr, dür, dür). it helps to form the major class of causative verbs, as: یازدر make or let (it) be written, سوردر make or let (it) to be driven away or rubbed in; etc. When movent with ésérè, and followed or not by a vowel ى, it forms the perfect tense of the verb; and, followed by ق or ك, it forms the perfect active and perfect passive participles, as well as the perfect verbal noun; thus: یازدی he wrote; یازدق who has written, which was written; the past action of writing. When movent with üstün, and followed by a vowel •, it forms the locative suffix or preposition (or postposition) ده (dè, dä) in or at; as: اوده in the house, at home. Again, movent with üstün, but followed by ن, it forms the ablative suffix دن from, than; as: بندن etc. The letter د is reduplicated in pronunciation instead of the ل of an Arabic definite article preceding it; thus الدعا èd-dü'ä.

ر

A. ر râ, vulg, rè, rî. The twelfth letter of the Turkish and Persian alphabets, the tenth of the Arabic. Its phonetic value is that of the letter r distinctly pronounced.

The full name of the letter is راء مهملة, in distinction from the letter ز. It is also termed راء قرشت (the ر of the word قرشت in the ابجد formula).

In chronograms it has the numeral value of 200. It does not join to a succeeding letter. It is one of the letters reduplicated in pronunciation when preceded by the Arabic definite article; as الرحمن èr-râhmân.

In the dates of letters, the letter ر represents the month Rebi u'l akhir ربيع الاخر. It also represents, sometimes, the words قمر (the moon) and نهار (the day)

The ر represents the ز in almanacs and mathematical tables, etc., and thus stands for the numeral 7; as: ر 17. It sometimes represents Saturday, as the seventh day, and Scorpio, as the seventh sign of the Zodiac.

The letter ر is one of the mystical letters placed at the head of certain chapters of the Qur'an, singly or in combination and read by their names in full.

From the ease with which it is pronounced, the letter ر has been termed the ass of the poets (حمار الشعرا).

In a few words, the ر is changed into ل in the vernacular of the common people; as برادر birâdèr, vulg. bilâdèr.

In Turkish Grammar, the letter ر ends the third person singular of the aorist tense indicative, and the active aorist participle of all affirmative verbs by being added to the root of the verb; as, قيرار qîrâr, كيدر gidèr, ارير èrîr, اصرور îsîrîr, اوقور òqûr, etc. It also forms or helps to form the causative verbs by being suffixed to the root of the simple verb. Generally, in this case, the causative syllable added is در dir, dîr; as, ايندر indir, èndîr; قيردر qîrdîr; which becomes ûr, or ûr, by assimilation; as, اوردر wûrdûr, قودر qòdûr, etc. But in a few cases the causative form is made by the insertion of a letter ر alone; as, چكور or چكر gèchîr, gèchûr.

A. ز zā, vulg. zē. In Turkish and Persian the thirteenth, and in Arabic, the eleventh letter of the alphabet. Its phonetic value is z. Its full name is زاء معجمه zāʾi muʿjēmè; the dotted ز. It is also termed زاهوز the ز of the word هوز (in the ابجد formula).

It has the numerical value of 7.

In writing, the letter ز never joins the succeeding letter, and it is reduplicated in pronunciation instead of pronouncing the ل of an Arabic definite article preceding it.

Being pronounced in Turkish nearly in the same manner with the letters ض and ظ, the letter ز is used at times by careless writers instead of those letters; or, a letter ظ is sometimes used instead of ز; as, زابط for ضابط, and ظغنوس for زاغنوس, etc.

In Turkish grammar, the letter ز performs several important functions.

By being added to the ordinary diminutive termination of substantives, it forms the diminutive of coaxing affection, thus: آدمجق a little man, آدمجغز a darling little man, etc.

In personal pronouns the letter ز forms the plural of the first, and of the second person, by substitution in the place of the termination of the singular, thus: ن I, ز we; سن thou, سز you.

As a suffixed possessive pronoun the letter ز forms the plural of the first and of the second person, thus: آدمم my man, آدمز our man, آدمك thy man, آدمكز your man, etc.

In verbs the letter ز terminates in some tenses the first, and in all tenses the second person plural; as, باقوروز, باقيورسكز etc.

In negative and impotential verbs, the letter ز also forms the third person singular of the aorist indicative, and the aorist active participle, thus: باقمز, باقه‌مز; it is consequently found in all the persons, singular and plural, of the aorist and past tenses of those verbs.

When a letter ز is the initial of an Arabic triliteral root that passes into the form افتعال, the servile ت of the form is changed into a د: thus: زجر, ازدجار izdijār, مزدجر mūzdējir, etc.

In Persian derivation, a letter خ in a passive participle becomes ز in the active and in the verbal noun; as, سوخته burnt, سوز that burns, سوزش an act of burning.

س

A. س sîn. The fifteenth letter of the Turkish and Persian alphabets, and twelfth of the Arabic. Its unvarying phonetic value is that of the letter s, as in sent. Being a soft consonant, it is always when movent pronounced with one of the soft vowels. Its full name is سین مهمله the undotted س. It is also called سین معجمه, the س of the word معجم (in the ابجد formula).

In chronograms and astronomical tables this letter has the numerical value of 60.

When the letter س is followed by a letter ح, or a letter ه, care should be taken to give to each letter its full phonetic value; as اسهام ès-hâm. تسهیل tès-hîl, etc.

The س is reduplicated in pronunciation instead of the ل of the Arabic definite article ال, when it follows this article as the initial of the noun; as, علی السحر 'âlè's-sâhâr.

The letter س, like ش, is often printed, and much more generally written in Turkish, without the serrations of its head.

Formerly many Turkish words were written with س where ص is now generally used. If a word beginning with س be met with which is not found in its alphabetical place in this lexicon, it must be sought under the letter ص.

In Turkish, the only grammatical or derivative uses of the letter س, are to form, followed by a vowel letter ا or ی, and added to any adjective, a verb of feeling or deeming, and rarely, followed by a consonant ر, but preceded by a long vowel letter ی, an active future participle of duty or necessity. Thus, from بیوك is formed the verb بیوکسیمك to deem large, great, or grand, from کلمك, the participle کلیسر who is to come, who ought to come.

In dates of letters and documents, the letter س stands for ش, and indicates the month شعبان.
